Most people believe that academic writing in different disciplines is vastly different. But these differences are only superficial, like those between humans. While each of us is completely unique, we’re all built out of the same elements. Start by embracing the commonalities, rather than looking for differences, and following the well-trodden path. As you’re moving forward, you’ll be able to forge your own unique path.

– Marek Kiczkowiak